Q21a: The government uses information from the US Census to make important decisions about political boundaries and federal resources for Native American people. The Census is often criticized for not accurately counting Native American people, which is estimated to cost tribes millions of dollars in federal, state, and other resources every year. Do you support tribes being able to provide their own population count to the federal government to use for these important decisions?

Q23: Many states want to pass laws requiring voters to show a state issued photo-ID with a physical street address that matches their voter registration form in order to vote. Do you have a state issued photo ID, like a driver's license, that has your current and up to date physical street address?
